Nuffield responsibility for a long time. Due to Russian remaining a " small/lesser-taught " language, it was never fully viable commercially as an independent course. The materials went through various editions, including a home-produced ('samizdat') edition distributed from the general editor's garage, then it was published by Stanley Thornes, then there was a new edition produced by Nuffield and ...

The Nuffield in-house projects grew fast and developed into the Nuffield Curriculum Centre. Andrew Hunt became the Centre director. Part of the reason for setting up the new Centre was the way that, in the early 1990s, the Government was dismantling the existing structures for dissemination, in-service training and support.
