The Color of Water is a memoir told in two very distinct and powerful voices. James McBride told the story about his white mother, raising her twelve mixed race children, caught (as the world was,) in the middle of the Civil Rights Movement, set primarily in New Jersey's Red Hook Projects. His mother, Ruth, was proudly adhered in her unique ways, and loathe to talk about her past, steeped in Jewish folklore, traditions, and faith.

Color of water - Wikipedia

At the root of his decision to write The Color of Water was his continued confusion about his mother's identity. In pursuing her past, visiting Suffolk, and interviewing his mother, he offers the reader a stunning window into the life of a woman and a family that suffered and triumphed, transcending divisions of race and religion in favor of love, family, friendship, and community - powers that bridge the basic human desire to understand how another has come to be the way that they are.
